

“Free-Range” Vs. Battery Eggs

“Free-Range” Hen

Battery-Caged Hen

Can You Tell the Difference?

“Free-Range” Hens are:

- Debeaked with hot bloody blade at one day old, with no anesthetic.
- Force molted (intentionally starved to shock the body into another laying cycle).
- At only 18 months old, just young girls, the hens are considered spent (unable to keep laying eggs at a fast enough pace) and are killed by the cheapest means possible.
- All of her brothers (roosters) are brutally killed as a baby chicks simply because they can't lay eggs.

Battery-Caged Hens are:

- Debeaked with hot bloody blade at one day old, with no anesthetic.
- Force molted (intentionally starved to shock the body into another laying cycle).
- At only 18 months old, just young girls, the hens are considered spent (unable to keep laying eggs at a fast enough pace) and are killed by the cheapest means possible.
- All of her brothers (roosters) are brutally killed as a baby chicks simply because they can't lay eggs.